From the London Monthly Magazine for January, 1804.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,

BEING fond of ſuch experiments in agriculture as promiſe a probability of advantage, I have tried many, and have often been well ſatisfied with the reſult.

But as two or three experiments are not ſufficient in any caſe, I will mention a few which may be conſidered but as hints thrown out for the improvement of others.

1. Quick fences often become open in many places at bottom, notwithſtanding the utmoſt attention, and more eſpecially if neglected. The barbary-ſhrub on the contrary, will make an impenetrable fence, and always cloſe at bottom, becauſe it always puts up numerous ſuckers from the roots, which fill every vacancy. It may as eaſily be raiſed from the berries as quick or hawthorn, and it grows faſter. The ſuckers alſo will ſtrike root eaſily, eſpecially if planted early. I ſuppoſe theſe ſhrubs may be had in plenty at moſt nurſeries. This is worth a thought from thoſe who have new grounds to incloſe.

2. The Indian ſtriped or ribband-graſs, which is cultivated in gardens would anſwer admirably for hay. In rich ground I have plants four feet high; what a burthen of hay would a field ſo cropped produce! Cattle are exceedingly fond of it: the ſeeds are eaſily ſaved, ſo that a perſon might ſoon have enough for a rood, and from that ſave again and again, for as many acres as he may chuſe. It is probable that the crop might be much too large to be made on the field where it grew; but if ſo it would be worth while to carry part into another field.

3. The everlaſting-pea, grown alſo in gardens, would make an advantageous crop eſpecially in ſtony land. When once ſown it will bear a crop for many years, without any annual trouble, except ſcattering ſome manure, and getting in the crop. It ſhould be cut for green food.

4. The Morocco-pea, alſo, would give a prodigious crop of green food: I ſuppoſe at leaſt, four times as much as vetches; and that for many years from one ſowing, as it comes up again, like the everlaſting-pea, every ſpring.

5. Scotch kale planted out in June, in good land, will grow very large before winter, and I am perſuaded would give an abundant ſupply for cattle, when no other juicy food is to be had. As it grows upwards it may be planted cloſe, and a vaſt deal will ſtand upon an acre. I have ſeen a few faint attempts to make advantage of this, but they were not judiciouſly managed. It was either planted out too late, or in very poor ground, and therefore it was not a fair trial.

6. The late Mr. Howard (the celebrated philanthrophiſt,) gave me a few potatoes of a peculiar ſort, which had been ſent to him from America. I ſoon increaſed the quantity. The produce of them was at leaſt double that of any other ſort I know; but they were not fit for the table. I turned ſome hogs into the land where they grew, and left them to root them up, and eat them, which they did completely, and grew as fat as I wiſhed them to be for roaſting pork in a ſhort time. By this means all attendance and trouble in fattening the hogs was ſaved and the land well manured for the next crop, and the quantity of potatoes was ſuch as paid me this way extremely well. I have ſince loſt this ſort of potatoe; but Mr. Howard told me that he had given it to many of his friends in Bedfordſhire. It is therefore very probable that it is ſtill there. Dr. Reſs, mentions this ſort under the article potatoe, in the firſt edition of his Cyclopedia, with many particulars reſpecting it.

7. It would, perhaps, be worth while to ſcatter a number of mixed garden ſeeds in a ſmall piece of land, and when they are ſufficiently grown, to turn a horſe in among them, and watch him to ſee which he prefers. I did ſo once but have loſt the memorandum of it. If my memory does not deceive me, the French honey-ſuckle was eaten with great avidity. If ſo that would be a valuable plant to introduce into field-culture, becauſe it grows high, & bears a great crop.

8. A ſimilar experiment to the former, if the plants be left to ſtand till ſevere winter, might probably give the knowledge of ſome uſeful plant for that ſeaſon of ſcarcity.

9. Whoever obſerves the greedy manner in which poultry of all ſorts, and alſo ſmall birds, will devour the ſeeds of the large ſunflower, may perhaps think, like me, that this plant would give a vaſt quantity of food for them on a little ground. The experiment might be tried on a few poles. I have been told that they give a flavor to the fleſh of poultry exactly like that of a pheaſant.

If theſe hints are acceptable, I may probably ſend you, from time to time, many more.

I am, &c. J. B. PIKE.

BOSTON, June 8.

Houſe of Repreſentatives, June 7.

The committee to whom was referred the ſpeech of His Excellency the governor, reported an anſwer, which was debated, and accepted; and the committee which drafted it, appointed to preſent the ſame.

ANSWER OF THE HOUSE.

May it please your Excellency,

THE Houſe of repreſentatives, deeply impreſſed with the obligation they have taken upon themſelves to perform the public duties, incumbent upon them, agreeable to the rules and regulations of the conſtitution, will on their part faithfully endeavor to protect their fellow citizens in the enjoyment of their lives, liberty and property; and ſcrupulouſly obſerve the principles of the conſtitution; and conſtantly adhere to thoſe of piety, juſtice, moderation, temperance, induſtry and frugality, in the formation of the laws neceſſary for the good adminiſtration of the Commonwealth.

We are highly ſenſible of the importance of an impartial diſtribution of juſtice to all the people, to preſerve an equality among them; and to enable them to enjoy that liberty, which, under the protection of law, ſecures their lives and property; and to unite them more cloſely together, & attach them more firmly to the State.

We perfectly and moſt ſincerely agree, with your Excellency, in your ſentiments of civil liberty; in your eſtimation of order and regularity in ſociety, and in your definition of equality.

Although it be obvious to thinking and cultivated minds, that nothing can be more oppoſite to liberty, than licentiouſneſs; yet it is no leſs obvious, that by the undiſtinguiſhing, the one is frequently confounded with the other.

To a deſtitution of correctneſs, of the public ſentiment, on the ſubject, is unqueſtionably to be imputed moſt of the evils, which have in ancient as well as in modern times diſturbed, convulſed and ſubverted to their foundations, thoſe ſections of the World, on which attempts have been made to maintain republican forms of Government.

Knowing—as we do know—that it is infinitely eaſier to kindle enthuſiaſm and to ſet on fire the zeal—than to inform the underſtanding of Man; we cannot watch too critically, or ſhield ourſelves too ſtrongly, againſt ambitious and deſigning men, who aſſume the garb of patriotiſm and employ their talents to inflame the paſſions of the people and excite their contempt of all decency and order.

It is utterly impoſſible for us to heſitate to concur with your excellency in the poſition, that all other equality than that of rights, is wholy inconſiſtent with the nature of things.

Liberty and equality, as defined by thoſe European Philoſophers, who have adopted the ſcheme, that love and reaſon impoſe upon each individual every neceſſary reſtraint; and who, with rapid ſtrides, are travelling on with man, to the perfectability of human nature, are highly calculated to undermine all rational liberty to proſtrate all civil ſociety and to blot from the face of the Earth all ſorts of government.

Your excellency may be aſſured, that we will ſpare no exertionts to aſſiſt our fellow citizent, in forming correct opinions of the terms, liberty and equality.

We are feelingly alive to the importance of the experiment, now making in our land, as to the capacity of the American people to enjoy perfect liberty with moderation, which has hitherto proved happily ſucceſsful. We ſhall certainly be ſolicitous to contribute to its ſucceſs by a faithful diſcharge of our duty. And we ſincerely reciprocate the ſentiment, that all the efforts of legiſlative wiſdom will be unavailing, without the aid of thoſe inſtitutions, which form the manners and morals of the people, and which tend to inſpire them with veneration for the SUPREME BEING, with reverence for juſt authority and reſpect for themſelves.

To the communication of your Excellency, upon the ſubject of the Judiciary of this Commonwealth, we will moſt cheerfully pay every attention, that the importance of the ſubject and the high reſpectability of the magiſtrates, by whom the alterations, of the preſent ſyſtem, are ſuggeſted, demand.

The houſe of Repreſentatives will not fail to afford their aid in directing the manner, in which the electors, on the part of thi commonwealth, of President Preſident of the United States, ſi pointed.

We rely with perfect confiden the purity and eminence of your cy's character, and our paſt happi ence of the fruits of your abilities, and virtues fully authorize, that y co-operate, with the two branches Legiſlature, in ſuch meaſures as ſh to render the ſtate reſpectable, to j juſtice among our fellow citizens, a cure to them a life of quiet and tran We at the ſame time beg you to acc aſſurances, that we will adopt and ly preſerve every proper mean to ef the ſame ends.

We on this occaſion congratulat Excellency and ourſelves, on your tion, to the firſt executive office Commonwealth. We conſider fellow citizens, while they have bute of gratitude to merit, have ſt evinced their own integrity, indep and diſcernment, by thus again you to this high ſtation.

Communication.

On Saturday last the most prodigious fall of rain was experienced in Fairfax County, which as ever been known by the oldest inhabitants liv[illegible] The weather had been uncommonly weeks, almost every day had pro- SEC. -ore heavy showers. But on the mon Cat day the clouds became un- rly heavy all day; the rain poured down in tor- thout the cessation of a whole day, with but short inter- all the fl[illegible] ers were raised in a little time incommo[illegible] shall be eight; even the small branch- swallow[illegible] large creeks, sweeping away and, in[illegible] all animals, cattle: Plantati- are torn [illegible] places and some of them have had the soil [illegible] completely swept off as to be nearly ruined. But the heaviest losses have been sus- tained by the millers. Dams swept away, race s broken and filled up, and even mills carried off One of the most remarkible instances of this kind, which has yet come to our knowledge, is that of James Douglas's on Difficult Run. The wa- ter rose about 20 feet higher than it has ever been known to do. The mill, which was a stone building, together with the store house, coopers shop, stable and meat house were all swept away, so that not a vestige of them remains. And this in a few minutes has a place which, for a number of years, had been a mart for the surrounding country, become a bare bleck shore—where, in- stead of the hum of industry, nothing is now to be heard but the howling of winds and the rust- ling of waters.

For the Alexandria Daily Advertiser.

The fate of the late proposition in Con- gress, for a change in our government, is at length decided. The consent of a sin- gle state was wanting to make it a part of our constitution, and the consent of that state has been obtained. After calmly at- tending to the history of this project, for the destruction of an invaluable feature in our national compact, who can doubt that our country stands on the precipice of ru- in, and that our deluded citizens are pre- pared to submit to that state of degrada- tion and slavery, of which they have long been warned, and from which the patriots of America have long endeavoured to save them? Hurried on by party madness, and implicitly devoted to the daring views of their favoured chief, they seem determin- ed to submit to every inroad of despotism; calmly and servilely to endure every spe- cies of insult and injury. In vain were the resplendent talents of a Butler, a Tracy, and a Griswold exerted in opposition to a measure so fraught with mischief and dan- ger—so destructive of the rights and sove- reignty of the smaller states. It was em- phatically the favourite hantling "of the man of the people;" and to gratify his wishes, the legislatures of many of those smaller states—men, who ought to have been their guardians and protectors, shame- fully surrendered their rights and indepen- dence. Repentance now comes too late— the blow is struck—the constitution has re- ceived its death-wound—"The collected wisdom" of a majority of the states, have stamped the measure with their approba- tion; it has become a part of that instru- ment, which we all have sworn to support; it will remain an eternal monument of the blindness and folly of our countrymen.

Let it be remembered, however, that the real friends of our country—the small but patriotic band of federalists in Con- gress, were not the authors or supporters of this disastrous project. Though feeble in numbers, they were powerful in talents, and those talents were nobly (but alas! un- successfully) exerted, to avert the deadly stab thus insidiously aimed at the once ad- mired, but now seemingly forgotten char- ter of our rights. The day must arrive, when, the many of our countrymen, who have been deluded by demagogues, into a support of this measure, will recollect with gratitude the bold and manly stand which was made in Congress, in opposition to the measure. On that day, the services and zeal of those few of the democrats, who, upon this question, dared to release them- selves from the trammels of party, and to speak the disquietude and alarms with which the iniquitous attempt had filled their bosoms, must be remembered with joy, by many of its present supporters. The name of BUTLER, will sound sweetly to the ears of his countrymen: Americans will recount with pride, his patriotic efforts to ward off destruction from their land— him they will produce as an illustrious ex- ample of worth and talents—of him they will say, the influence of power could not intimidate, party zeal could not swerve from that path, which duty and patriotism pointed out—Not content with having done his enndeavours to prevent the adoption of the measure by Congress as soon the blind- ness and rage of party had secured to it success in that body, he directed his atten- tion to the legislature of that state, whose chosen representative he was, and in a strain of indignant eloquence, and manly reasoning presented to their views, the dis- asters, miseries and horrors consequent up- on its final ratification. That effort, how- ever, proved unsuccessful; the warning voice was not heard; state rights and state sovereignty, when put in competition with the designs of our Executive Chief, were deemed unworthy of regard; the tears of the patriot shed over the fallen liberties of his country; the impressive language of truth and of argument were of no avail; when republicans were taught to believe that this measure was the test by which their republicanism was to be tried; their devotion to their Lord and Master to be established.

The success of the scheme however, has not impaired the force of the reasoning of the Senator, and cannot close our eyes a- gainst the dangers which he has unfolded to our view. His letter to the governor of South-Carolina, will yet be patiently read, and carefully studied by the people, and in that letter, as in a faithful mirror, they will see the wicked views, and alarming de- signs of their rulers.

After having mentioned the many evils, with which the projected alteration of our government, even at the most auspicious moment for its adoption must be fraught, he discloses additional reasons against its ratification at the present period. "I had not long been in Senate since my last election, before I perceived a combination among certain large states, unfair in itself and dangerous in its consequences, to the rights of other states; they hold meetings to decide what shall take place, and prevail in Senate." "Into this combination they have drawn two or three of the small states, and by this combination nothing is suffered to come fairly before the Senate, that is not either brought forward by one of the party, or has not the previous sanc- tion." Gracious God! And is it possible, that the disclostre made, by a leading mem- ber of the party, will not strike terror and alarm into the minds of the people? Can it be believed that in America, whose citi- zens boast of being the friends of liberty, and who affect to prize above all earthly blessings the independence and freedom in the attainment of which, the best blood of our countrymen was shed, combinations formed for the aggrandizement of the few, by the destruction of the many can be tamely submitted to? Can the spirit of our countrymen be sunk so low? Are those noble sentiments of liberty, that ge- nerous love of freedom which once glowed in their bosoms be entirely extinguished? Or do they mean shamefully to indulge in a criminal apathy, until the threatened dan- ger approaches more near, and the schemes for the destruction of their rights are more matured. Let them remember that they have already slumbered too long; that the dearest privileges of freemen have been wrested from them; that the little portion of their rights which still remain is every day diminished, and that if they do not quick- ly arouse from their fatal lethargy, they will soon learn that their exertions would be vain, ruin, disaster, and misery will quickly overtake them, and fruitless will be any efforts they can make to save their country, and their posterity from the grasp of tyranny and destruction. ARION.

A retrospect—The system of govern- ment adopted during the contest for our liberty, at the close of the war was found feeble and inefficient: from the limited, and dependent powers of the national go- vernment the boon we had obtained be- came insecure and of doubtful possession. To preserve the union of the states; to pro- vide for the general welfare; and to protect our citizens in the peaceable enjoyment of those grights and priviledges which they had so recently acquired, demanded the united wisdom of the country. The crisis was met by FEDERALISTS with a prompti- tude commensurate with its importance, and the collected talents of an infant nation were exersed for its preservation. Delib- erate reflection succeeded to the enthusiasm of the moment, and a constitution built on principles sanctioned by experience of ages was presented for the approbation of the pepole. By the warm exertions of feder- its this constitution was adopted; by their hands this [illegible]stone of our political tem- ple was laid. Then freedom smiled with beingnant aspect; liberty mounted her proud pedestal, and anarchy fell motion- less at her feet. From this æra we date our greatness. Sunk to the utmost point of depression, from this moment we rose to respectability as a nation. The benefi- cial effects of this government when admin- istered in the true spirit of its principles, as the rock of our political salvation. The situation of our country previous to the establishment of this government is known to all. The contrast was striking. We were weak—we were then made strong; we were impoverished by an expensive war —wealth has succeeded; was a dissolu- tion of our political union threatened—it was bound with a seven fold cord; were we defenceless, exposed to the grasp of ra- pacious ambition—our energies were con- centrated, and fitted for exertion; were anarchy and discord stalking with gigantic strides in any part of our country—"these baneful spirits fled & like the dew drop from the lion's mane sunk into air." Order suc- ceeded to confusion—harmony to discord —peace and happiness to the jealous bick- erings of a discontented people.

Let it ever be remembered but more par- ticularly at this period, that when our con- federation, the offspring of necessity, was no longer strengthened by the generous en- thusiasm that was its support in the hour of danger; when the powers confided to the government were adequate to every ration- al purpose and a want of confidence was discernable in every direction: when every exertion was paralised, and our best princi- ples in a state of jeopardy, the Federal Con- stitution cloathed with the panoply of civil and religious liberty, came like a protecting angel to shield us from ruin. Washing- ton the founder of the republic, the father of Federalists, the saviour of his country, guided our councils. "And supported by his compatriots, having led us to peace and independence, he again conducted us from weakness, wretchedness and despon- dency, to strength, hope and happiness.," 'A government mild in its principles, ad- ministered with an energy that gave it dig- nity and strength, operated like magic.— The power was not seen but it was felt with peculiar force.' Public and private credit was restored—commerce flourished beyond all former example; agriculture felt its benign influence; a high degree of respectability was atchieved to our nation- al character abroad, and our prosperity was rapidly increasing at home. Wealth and happiness flowed in upon us through num- berless channels, and we were with majes- tic step, "advancing to destinies, beyond the ken of mortal eye. Let it not be forgot- ten that the framers of this constitution, its advocates and supporters were Federal- ists;—and that the very men who were the most violently opposed to its adoption, are found among those, who are now honor- ed by the people. The advocates for de- mocracy were opposed to the federal go- vernment; and what these enemies to the peace and prosperity of the union, could not effect by an open opposition, they are since their accession to power, enabled to to accomplish by those insidious measures, which are constantly enervating and will eventually destroy. Utica Patriot.

The following advertisement, taken from the last United States' Gazette, is repub- lished not for the purpose of exposing a plagiarism, but of circulating so delicate a compliment to Mr. Jefferson, as is here conveyed by our ingenious friseur, in pick- ing up the identical phrases of that great philosopher and superb writer, from his various speeches, replies and messages, and adopting them to the humble purpose of an advertisement. That the reader may distinguish, at once how much is borrowed from Mr. Jefferson, all that part is printed in italics. POST.

FASHIONABLE INTELLIGENCE.

JOHN RICHARD DEBORUS HUGGINS,

LADIES HAIR DRESSER,

FROM NEW YORK.

Takes the earliest opportunity to inform the Ladies of Philadelphia, that in compli- ance with earnest and reiterated entreaties, he has arrived at this city, and intends to make it the place of his residence long e- nough to develope character and design; or in other words, he means to devote some days to the best employment of his talents in the line of his profession. Of the various duties of a hair dresser of eminence, none excites more anxious concern than that of turning his abilities to the most profitable account for himself and most for the happi- ness of others.

No duty, at the same time is more diffi- cult to fulfill. If a due participation of e- molument is a matter of right, how is this to be obtained but by journeys to different parts of the United States? The knowledge of the best ARENAS possessed by a single in- dividual, is of necessity limited. To seek out the best through the whole union, we must resort to other information, which, from the best motives, is sometimes incor- rect. In the case of Philadelphia, however, the arena of his present labours, time was taken, information was sought, and such ob- tained as could leave no room to doubt of its fitness. From private sources it was learnt that the place was healthy, populous and but ill-supplied at present, with suita- ble hair-dressers. It is objected indeed that Huggins may not be able to perform in per- son all the details of his office; It is very likely his business may so multiply that a small additional force will be wanted, but if he gives you the benefit of his understanding his faithfulness, and takes care, that all the details are well performed by himself or his necessary assistants, all beneficial purposes will be answered. Should indeed this hap- pen in event, the ladies may rest assured, Huggins will do in it what shall be just and necessary for the public service. In the mean time he should be tried without being prejudged. He concludes this hasty ad- dress by declaring that he enters on the ex- ercise of duties comprehending what is so dear and valuable to you, not with a view to the injuries it may enable him to do to other hair-dressers at some future day, but with a conscientious desire to direct the energies of his hand, to cut, curl, and dress the hair in the most becoming manner so as to please ladies. in the form of angels, suscep- tible of happiness, educated in the love of or- der, habituated to the bungling operations of vulgar hair-dressers and valuing the bles- sings of a well ornamented head above all price.

Perhaps it may be by some expected, that in compliance with the fashion of the day, Huggins should profess a sort of mo- desty as to his own talents that he does not feel, and that, at least, he should declare a sincere consciousness that the task he has un- dertaken is above his talents and that he ap- proaches it with those anxious and awful presentiments which the greatness of the charge and the weakness of his powers so justly inspire—in short that he shrinks from the contemplation and humbles him- self before the magnitude of the undertaking. —But no: Huggins has been too long ac- quainted with the satisfaction belonging to plain, honest dealing, to forfeit it now by neednessly playing the hypocrite in the face of the world; instead of such canting, therefore, he boldly asserts that he feels fully adequate to the work he has in hand; if he had not he would not have attempted it; he cannot finish better than by saying that relying on the patronage of the good will of the ladies of Philadelphia, he advan- ces with alacrity to execute their commands, ready (but by no means very willing,) to retire from it whenever they become sensible how much better choices it is in their power to make.

This lottery has been authorised by the legislature of Virginia, for the laudable purpose of erecting a seminary of learning in or near the metropolis of this state. With this view, it is contemplated to raise 20,000 dollars, and 2,500 dollars in addition, for defraying the expences attendant on drawing the lottery. Citizens of the first respectability have been selected as trustees, and they have pledged themselves to use their utmost exertions to carry it into effect. The scheme has the advantage of giving to each adventurer, a chance for some very large prizes whilst the proportion of prizes to blanks, is so great as to invite the friends of the intended institution to partake in the lottery, with very little risk of their becoming loosers The treasurer of this state is to be appointed to receive the money for the tickets as they are sold, and to pay the amount of the prizes to the fortunate adventurers. It is believed that the above considerations will induce a rapid sale of tickets and the drawing will commence as soon as a sufficient number shall be sold to authorize it—which it t believed will be on the second Monday in December next.
